Shaded areas indicate the average depth to the base of composite-stratigraphic unit 1 and the maximum depth to the base of composite-stratigraphic unit group 2 - 7. Nonparametric statistical tests of similarity were The analyses conducted here differ from the approach performed on distribution shapes, medians, and variances taken by Welhan and others (2006) because of the small of interbed thicknesses to determine if the different sample sample size of the new corehole data set. The analyses populations displayed statistically significant differences or if conducted here allow more refined tests of temporal they were statistically stationary. The Kolmogorov-Smirnov stationarity because they consider more information about (K-S) two sample test was used to compare distribution shape the statistics of individual rather than aggregate interbed (form, skewness, peakedness, and degree of tailing) among thicknesses, whereas the approach taken by Welhan and pairs of sample populations; the Mann-Whitney (M-W) test others (2006) is better at testing spatial stationarity across was used...
